Malawi, is known as 'the warm heart of Africa' because of the cordial and friendly people. Anyone who has been there will agree to this. You immediately feel welcome if 'Muli bwanj' (how are you?) is called to you. It feels like coming home. Although it is one of the poorest countries in the world, you always see a big smile on the faces of the Malawian residents. People live from day to day and despite the poverty, they radiate a lot of happiness. There is a lot of laughter, dancing and singing. People take care of each other. Sick, old people and children are extra supported amid close family ties. Despite the lack of prospects, people try to make the best of it.
